

What is claimed is:

1. A method of preventing defective germination or rosette formation of a plant seed which tends to suffer from defective germination or rosette formation during growth thereof comprising the steps of:

leaving the plant seed to stand in highly watery condition at low temperature in a dark place; and drying the plant seed.